FAIRNESS.

There is so much senseless, unreasonable abuse of the Mormons by editors who know absolutely nothing of what they write, and so much blackguarding, if officials and private individuals who may suggest the possibility of the Mormons having rights which laws, people and press should respect, that it is rather surprising when an influential newspaper outside of Utah says anything which can be construed into a request for fairness and justice for the Saints. The New York Times can afford to be fair and just towards the Mormons, and usually is so. An evidence of this is found in its editorial comment on the action of the Governor and Legislature of Arizona, in repealing the unconstitutional test oath act of the last previous Assembly. The Times says:

Two years ago the Arizona Legislature passed a test law, devised for the disfranchisement of all members of the Mormon church in that Territory. Governor Zuley recommended in his recent message that this law should be repealed. "A man may be an advocate of bigamy or polygamy, or belong to the church that so believes," said he, "but until he puts forth his belief into practice he has offended no one. Legislation should control actions, not opinions." The law has since been repealed. The Edmunds act is law in Arizona as well as in Utah, so far as it forbids the practice of polygamy, and provides punishment for the crime. Two or three years ago it was used in Arizona for the conviction of several Mormon polygamists. The Territory has therefore, sufficient law for the suppression of polygamy. No man should be deprived of the rights of citizenship for the sole reason that he holds a certain belief. If that belief leads him to commit the crime of utmost rigor, Governor Zuley's recommendations were sound. But the people of Arizona should strive to enforce the Edmunds act wherever within their boundaries a man who has violated it can be found.

The Edmunds-Tucker bill now before Congress proposes to do for the people of Utah just what the test oath act has been doing for the Mormons of Arizona. It proposes to disfranchise the Mormons, not because the Mormons are guilty of any crime, not because they have broken any law, but because the Mormons entertain a peculiar religious belief. The Tucker bill does not propose to disfranchise and punish polygamists, for these are already disfranchised, and are being punished most severely through the operations of the act of five years ago; it is to operate against non-polygamists, who are to be compelled to renounce their religious belief as a condition upon which they may retain even the small degree of American citizenship permitted to residents in the Territory.

A man who has just gone into the saloon business in Point Pleasant, West Virginia, announces the fact in the local newspapers, says he has paid $317 license for the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors, and adds:

Now, if any wife has a drunkard, for a husband, or if any man has a friend who is dissipated, I say emphatically, give me notice, and all such shall be excluded from my place. Let mothers, fathers and sisters do likewise, and their request shall be heeded. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I will not sell whisky or other liquors to minors, drunkards, or to the poor and destitute. I will not let them drink. Let them use it where it will do the most good.

That man's resolution is a good one, but he'll bear watching. He is entirely too good. If he is so strongly opposed to doing harm, and so bent on doing good, it seems to us that it would have been suggested to him that the liquor business was something in which he could not engage without doing violence to his conscience. The way for a man to assure himself that he will do no injury by selling whisky is to not sell whisky.

A CHESTNUT.

The story which the Chicago Tribune has had telegraphed from Lincoln, Nebraska, to the effect that the late Brigham Young is about to reappear on the scene, and inaugurate a new boom for Mormonism, is decidedly rich; but it is rather tame, after all, and does no credit to the imagination of the correspondent who invented the tale. When he was about it the fellow might have done the business up in style, and identified the Wandering Jew, discovered the Lost Tribes, or done something that would have given his imagination a fair chance. Besides, this bringing to life of Brigham Young is decidedly chest nutty. Half a dozen times at least, during the nine years that the late leader has been in his grave, he has been widely reported to be alive, and only awaiting a favorable and fortuitous occasion for exhibiting himself.

that fully 25,000 persons gazed upon the lifeless form and features of the lamented leader, that many thousands followed the body to the burial place, and many hundreds saw the remains inclosed in the coffin and lowered into the grave. The fellow also forgets or never knew what was the character of Brigham Young, for the last thing President Young would want to do would be to let his enemies think that he was dead.

THE SAN FRANCISCO street car strikers continue their deviltry and destruction. Our dispatches this morning report the explosion of two dynamite cartridges under cars of the Sutter Street line, by which the cars were damaged, windows broken and people badly frightened, if not injured. These outrages will probably continue until some of the perpetrators have been caught and punished; but it should be understood that the first dynamite found will be swung upon the most convenient lamp-post. There are some crimes too heinous to be dealt with by the slow and uncertain process of the law, and this thing of making war upon a helpless and innocent community by dynamite is one of them.

SOCIALISTS RIGHT THIS TIME.

For once the Chicago Socialists are right. At their meeting on Sunday they adopted resolutions protesting against the establishment of a military garrison at Chicago. In this matter all good citizens should stand in with the Socialists. This is not a military government; it was never intended to be a military nation, and above all it was expressly designed that the Federal troops should not be employed, or their influence used in the affairs of a State. When a State loses its ability to enforce its laws, to maintain a republican form of government, and preserve order, it may call in the Federal power; the general government has also assumed the right to employ its soldiers to protect its property in the States; but while the States have the ability to manage their own affairs, and the disposition to manage them, there ought to be no interference by the Federal government and can be none legitimately.

The scheme for a military garrison in Chicago had its birth in the fears of a few millionaires of that city. They were alarmed by the rapid growth of the Socialists' organization and the spread of socialistic ideas, and apprehended danger to their persons and property. These men formed a pool and bought a valuable tract of land, which they tendered to government upon condition that a permanent fort, garrisoned by Federal troops, be maintained there. The people of Chicago do not want any such post, and the officials of the city and State, if they are worthy their places, and understand the nature of the government which they are administering, will indignantly resent the proposition that the city and State cannot protect the persons and property of the citizens without the aid of the general government.

The Socialists are correct in saying a garrison at Chicago would be a constant menace to the people. It would be more than a threat; it would be a subversion of the rights of the people, and a disregard of the local authority, which authority ought to be maintained inviolate and supreme, even against the Federal government itself. This is a time of peace; there is danger from neither foreign enemies nor internal revolutionists, and the people want to see just as little of soldiers and of military authority as possible. It will be time enough to use troops when the civil power shall fail, which is not the case as yet in Chicago, nor is it likely to be the case so long as Anarchists and dynamiters are being brought to the scaffold. We sincerely hope the scheme for a military post in the city by the lake will be abandoned, and that a handful of rich men of the town will not be able to use the army to defy and set at naught the theory and practice of the American system of government, nor even to menace and hush into silence the wretched and wide-mouthed Anarchists. The protest ought not to come from Socialists alone, but from all citizens of Chicago and of Illinois.

Those who are blaming the Catholic Church for unfrocking Father McGlynn, of New York, and repudiating the doctrines which he teaches in regard to the ownership of land, cannot understand what those doctrines are. In a letter to Archbishop Corrigan, Father McGlynn says:

My doctrine about land has been made clear in speeches, in reported interviews and in published articles, and I repeat it here. I have taught and I shall continue to teach in speeches and writings, as long as I live, that land is rightfully the property of the people in common, and that private ownership of land is against natural justice, no matter what civil or ecclesiastical laws it may be sanctioned; and I would bring about instantly, if I could, such change of laws all the world over as would confiscate private property land without one penny of compensation to the misdeeds owners.

Is it any wonder that the church does not want to be saddled with the responsibility of upholding a man who teaches so monstrous a doctrine?

SECRETARY WHITNEY is entitled to the thanks of the recklessly venturesome as well as to those of the country at large. He says that with his consent the government will send out no more expeditions in search of the north pole, or to rescue parties who may have gone as private explorers and discoverers. He says he will discourage such expeditions and wants the foolhardy to understand it. Enough lives have been sacrificed and enough money expended in these vain efforts to do something which would be no benefit to mankind were they done. Enough is known of the polar regions to satisfy everybody that if all were known about it, the human family would be no better off. The north pole will keep whether or not it is visited by men.
